In a six-year programme funded by the US National Science Foundation (NSF) and run out of Colombia's Pontificia Universidad Javeriana (PUJ), students from across the country are being taught Latin, history and mathematics, but also live in the streets to understand how these subjects are fundamental to a country's economy and security. The scheme, which began in 2005, is now in its final stages with the training of about 60 students from six Colombian regions who will be able to advance to university after four years of their programme. The programme is called El Sistema Javeriano, or Javeriana system. The programme, which was due to run until 2017 but now is due to close by 2015, is thought to be the first attempt to create an educational system in which students go to school for six years in order to gain the basic knowledge they need to prepare for university. The Javeriana system is run in two stages and the first stage is a two-year programme to teach basic maths and science. The second, two-year phase is for students to gain the knowledge they need to pass the national university entrance examination. Students are taught in an area called La Floresta, in the northern Colombian city of Santa Rosa de Coporaque, close to the border with Venezuela. Students live in the streets, which are known as "neighbour
