ball for the final out of the 12th By Greg Johns / MLB.com | ATLANTA -- Alfonso Soriano had to know that he would make history before he broke camp with the Cubs, that his name would be included among the list of the top 1,000 players who ever played in the Major Leagues. He did his part by breaking out and catching Hamilton's fly ball at the warning track, then flipping it to first base for the final out in the 12th inning. As it turned out, Soriano needed to do a little more to make his mark on the Major League record books. When the Cubs returned to Wrigley Field after a weekend off, he had no doubt that he would make an appearance in the 1,000-game club. "It's like a dream come true," said Soriano, who played his 1,000th career game on Wednesday. "I said, 'I'm going to play in 1,000 games.'... I'm looking forward to it." But there was no fanfare, no standing ovation, no stars-and-stripes unveiling of the plaque. The only special mention was a brief write-up in the box score, as Soriano became the first player in the Majors to play in his 1,000th game. This was his first season in the National League, where he continued his success from years past as he became the fifth player in club history to reach the 1,000-game milestone. The others were Ernie Banks, Hank Aaron, Babe Ruth and Reggie Jackson. But Soriano wasn't the only member of the Cubs in on the record-breaking accomplishment. Soriano's former teammate, Matt Garza, was also making his first appearance in the Majors. "It's unbelievable," said Garza, who made three scoreless relief appearances. "You look at Soriano and he's been around as long as anybody in the game. Just to play in 1,000 games, it's incredible. He's been a great teammate. To see him do it on the road and up and down the road, he's unbelievable." Soriano
