Sogeti, which was acquired by Verizon in a $1.9bn deal in 2007, looks like a safe, stable choice to me. Its management boast of the long-term view of delivering results with a long-term strategy. It keeps its scope broad and manageable. It's not a trend leader but it is so well-executed that it delivers for its clients. I believe Sogeti is a company that loves its clients, which helps explain why it has driven up the value of its shares so well over the last few years. It also means that those clients get a good return on their trust. I would go so far as to say that it's a company I would buy shares in with cash right now, given the current direction of its shares. It's a better choice than Accenture, Booz Allen, CGI, IBM, PwC and SAP. I would also say that the stock is not a share purchase fund play. The shares sell for around 20p, which is a bit above the current Shareholder Weighting Target, and they have risen at least 70 per cent over the last year. That doesn't mean Sogeti is out of favour with the fund manager, but it's interesting that such an overweight investment has been performing well despite the general market. Sogeti is one of the UK's best-valued technology businesses, I'd add, and these recent results, plus the fact that they have earned their place in the Shareholder Fund Weighting Target, demonstrate that. The company looks to be in a good position to grow over the long term, though, and its shares look like an excellent long-term investment. Fishing Point Water based The fishing point by Frisch & Weiss is without doubt the most important model of its kind on the market. The drilling rig is the ideal solution
