Family of woman pushing for English causes of death change wants to move on A woman whose husband is pushing for a change to the manner of her death was saved by timely first aid by a taxi driver who runs a chain of taxi firms. Dana Topping, 52, was found dead at her home in Gloucester. After being informed of her death, her husband Clive, 65, said: "It's just one of those things that happens. If I'd been given different advice I believe it would have made a difference." Dana ToppingCredit: Gloucestershire Live Since her death, the coroner at the inquest into her death, Alun Jones, has ruled that the manner of her death should be amended to one of suicide by hanging. Clive ToppingCredit: Gloucestershire Live A provisional hearing at the inquest into Dana's death will continue to hear from experts on the suspected role of tranquillisers in her death on Monday (September 23). To win the Coroners Court case, the family must demonstrate that there was a clear "causal nexus" between the use of tranquillisers and her death. He said: "I have to be realistic, if it's going to succeed I have to ask myself, what's it for? She wasn't really depressed, it's just a legal thing. "The inquest has to prove that the medication she was on caused or contributed to her death." Clive ToppingCredit:
